

I am the controller of a manufacturing company. My company sends faxed invoices to our customers. I recieve faxed credit inquiries from other vendors of my company's customers. We do receive unsolited advertisements, but it takes a few seconds to throw them in the trash. Now you are requiring my staff to do more paperwork to track fax authorizations between our customers and ourselves. In addition, the credit checking function will be much more onerous than the unsolited faxes that we receive. You've made things worse! Not better. This regulation needs to be rewritten with some common sense.
